Thermal Imaging & Dentistry

Case Study 1 TMJ Dysfunction

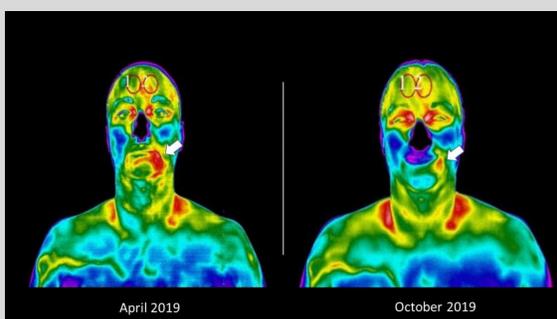

Thermal imaging isn't new to dentistry...

By April Berman, CTT, RDH

Thermal imaging is not new in the field of dentistry, the first articles about thermography in dentistry appeared in the 1970's. Thermal imaging is an effective, radiation-free way to help examine and assess oral health conditions and/or unexplained dental pain. It can also identify areas in the mouth that need closer attention or further investigation or that may have otherwise gone unnoticed by a clinical exam or x-rays alone. Thermal imaging is a great way to monitor the healing process and progress of dental treatments performed by your dental professional or how your homecare has improved the overall health of your mouth.

Case Study 2 Gum Disease

Here are a few oral health conditions that can be assessed with thermography:

- Root Canals
- Inflammation
- Jaw Cavitation
- Fillings/Dental Implants
- Facial Nerve Pain/Injury
- TMJ Dysfunction - Case Study 1
- Gum Disease - Case Study 2

This dental case study exhibits how sensitive the infrared camera is regarding abnormalities in the muscles, blood vessels and nerves of the face and jaw. The arrows in the 2018 thermogram are showing asymmetric hyperthermia (increased heat patterns) localized to the right side of the TMJ indicating dysfunction. Following this client's thermography screening, she was referred for a specific dental treatment. The thermography images a year later clearly shows how effective this treatment was and how it improved the client's TMJ dysfunction.

This dental case study shows asymmetrical hyperthermia localized to the client's left side of her mouth. The client had no dental pain but reported that "sometimes my mouth bleeds when I brush and floss." A specific protocol was given to help reduce the gum inflammation and improve her oral health. The images just six months later show the progress and improvement this client has made with just a few easy homecare practices.

We know that at first your thermography report may be difficult to understand, but don't worry we have professionals to help! We are pleased to offer you the opportunity to speak with April A. Beaman, RDH, CTT, a Holistic, Biological Dental Hygienist & Certified Thermographic Technician. Following your thermography screening, this valuable 15-minute dental consultation will help you navigate and understand the report pertaining to the dental findings. April can also offer professional recommendations to empower you to improve your oral health, provide you with the knowledge to move forward and discuss the thermography findings with your dentist or simply just give you a second opinion.

April is extremely educated in the whole-body approach to oral health and dentistry and can offer insight on what your thermography images are saying about you! Disease starts in the mouth, understanding how oral health impacts the rest of your body is an important key to overall longevity and health.

DENTAL CONSULTATION

Thermography offers a non-invasive way to measure areas of inflammation in the dental, cranial and thyroid regions. It can also be used to help detect any indications of physiological changes around sites of dental work such as the presence of infection, concerns with a crowned tooth or a failing root canal, and/or jaw cavitations due to extracted teeth.

If the thermogram reveals sites of hyperthermia or inflammation around the oral cavity it can then be utilized by the practitioner to either, monitor how well a treatment has worked, and/or help design and carry out a plan of action for alleviating the cause of the problem. By utilizing the additional thermographic information that dental x-rays alone may not provide, the practitioner can correlate findings, which can then help the patient become more educated and empowered about their dental health.

Your Consult with April:

- Patients will be able to speak to Registered Dental Hygienist with over 15 years of clinical experience
